MARKET AND TRADING STRATEGY

MARKET COMMENTARY

- The market recorded another losing session as the VN-Index closed at 1,826.47 (-0.98%), indicating that short-term selling pressure is gaining intensity and overwhelming the supportive cash flow, which remains cautious as reflected by an increase in liquidity compared to previous sessions.
- The action of continuing to drift further below the MA(20) line, around the 1,893 zone, and slipping below the 1,840 threshold demonstrates that supportive efforts from cash flow remain unclear and indecisive, while this ongoing movement continues to pose short-term risks to the market. The next support zone is currently around the 1,810 area, the weekly MA(20) line, and the market is highly likely to test this support zone in the near future.

TRADING STRATEGY

- Investors should temporarily maintain a cautious monitoring stance, as market-supporting signals remain unclear and still harbor short-term risks. The fact that the VN-Index continues to drift away from the MA(20) line, coupled with foreign net selling pressure, requires Investors to remain patient and wait for the market to confirm a support signal or establish a tight and balanced accumulation base.
- During this phase, Investors should not rush to increase portfolio weights, but rather consider restructuring their portfolios and keeping holdings at a reasonable level. If portfolio weights are already at a reasonable level, Investors may consider utilizing sharp market shakes to make exploratory purchases at favorable price zones for select stocks that have shown signs of improvement recently and have rapidly corrected back to positive support zones.

Ticker Technical Analysis

GAS
Sideway

Support	Current Price	Resistance
76.0	82.2	92.0

➤ The recovery signal showcased by GAS on May 29, 2026, is gradually fading following two recent losing sessions. Supportive signals for GAS remain unclear, marked by a slight decline below the MA(20) line. Pullback risks may still be potential, but the area around the MA(200) line, near the 77.7 level, is expected to provide supportive drive for GAS.

MSN
Sideway

Support	Current Price	Resistance
68.0	73.2	76.0

➤ MSN continues its downward price trend after losing the 76 support threshold despite supply pressure not being overly large, as reflected by recent low liquidity. The downward movement may continue in the near future for MSN to find a new equilibrium zone. The next support zone for MSN is currently the 68 - 70 area.

HIGHLIGHT POINTS

DGW – Growth drivers remain intact

(Hung Nguyen – hung.nb@vpsc.com.vn)

- DGW’s Q1-2026 results significantly exceeded our expectations by 33%, with net revenue reaching VND 8,500 bn (+54.0% YoY) and NPAT-MI at VND 200 bn (+89.0% YoY). The strong performance was primarily driven by the robust breakout in the laptop & tablet segment (+101.5% YoY) and the server segment (+157.4% YoY), alongside improved profit margin resulting from no additional provisions for securities investments and the absence of one-off financial expenses of approximately VND 76 bn recorded in the same period last year.
- We are currently reviewing our projections for DGW’s net profit and target price, taking into consideration potential provisions for securities investments, the business outlook for segments heavily impacted by the rising RAM and chip prices (such as laptops, tablets, and servers), as well as a less favorable valuation environment including higher risk-free rates, beta assumptions in our long-term DCF model, and the reassessment of the 2026F target PE multiple following the anticipated IPO of DMX.
- Overall, DGW’s share price has de-rated by 25% over the past three months, currently trading at a trailing PE of 14.1x and a forward PE of 13.1x (based on the Company’s plan for the first half of 2026). This implies that the current valuation appears attractive relative to the expected earnings growth (average 25.0% YoY for 2025–2027 under our current forecasts).
